Support for businesses who move goods to the EU: A message from the Business Secretary

Our free trade deal gives us a clear framework for trading with the EU. Everyone who trades with EU member states must follow the new rules to keep their business moving.

In this week's letter, I want to focus on the range of Government support available for businesses who send goods to the EU.

The Government will continue to provide support and guidance for businesses exporting to the EU and the rest of the world, to make this process as simple as possible.

Yours sincerely,

Rt Hon Kwasi Kwarteng MP

Secretary of State for Business, Energy & Industrial Strategy

New rules for businesses

- You must declare any goods you send to the EU, providing details about what you're sending and what it's worth, using a customs declaration form. You can get a customs intermediary to help you do this.
- If you're sending goods using a fast parcel operator or express courier, they'll declare the goods for you, using the information you provide. This option could be beneficial for smaller businesses who aren't looking to get a contract with a customs agent.
- If you're sending goods by post valued at £900 or less, Royal Mail will give you a customs declaration sticker to fill in and attach to the parcel. For goods worth more than £900, Royal Mail will submit the customs declaration for you, using the information you provide.
- You will need an Export Health Certificate \(EHC\) to export food or drink that contains products of animal origin such as meat, dairy or eggs.
